EDGAR C. LACKLAND. Spring millinery blossomed with radiance yesterday afternoon at the St. Louis Woman's Club. The ballroom never looked trayer, not even when smart dances are a session, for then no hats appear. Yesterday there were hats with flowers of the rainbow—and a few more larger than the session of the rainbow—and a few more larger than the affair was merely a drawing-room recital. When he came hurrying in and discovered that nearly 600 laddes and many men were packed into the big ballroom in regular grand opera fashion, he suffered a surprise and a severe shock. His numbers, however, gave much pleasure. Many of the andience had heard him play in private pariors. ance yesterday afternoon at the St. Louis Woman's Club. The ballroom never looked gayer, not even when smart dances are in session, for then no hats appear. Yesterday there were hats with flowers of every hue of the rainbow-and a few more every hue of the rainbow—and a few more—hats with chiffon and tulle and velvet bows and silt spangles and the entire category of brilliancy known only to the milliners' art, until Henry T. Kent and V. Mott Porter, who don't often get a glimpse of afternoon functions and consequently afternoon millinery, sat during half the programme with their eyes shaded to keep out the dazzle and the other half in a state of absolute and delightful bewilderment.

bers, however, gave much pleasure. Many of the audience had heard him play in private pariors.

Mrs. Julius S. Walsh, whose harp is heard all too seldom, and Mr. Tholl contributed as accommaniment to Mme. Albertini's closing group of songs, and then came the attle music sketch entitled "Cups and Saucers," by Grossmith, and given by Mme. Albertini and Edgar Lackland. It is strongly reminiscent of that tameful Robyn operatta. "Brica-Brac," which some of the audience vesterday remembered, when it was given at Mrs. Chaude Kilpatrick's muricale four or five years ago, Indeed, the libretto is unchanged, and the music very similar to that which Alfred Robyn wrote for Mirs Mary Norris Berry and Joseph Buse. These two afterwards repeated the sketch several times for chartiable enterprises and for the Union Club.

Both performances scored decided hits yesterday, if the prolonged anniause and the many pretty speeches which assailed their ears may be taken as sufficient and convincing evidence.

The ballroom platform was set as for a drawing-room, with an abundance of flowers and palms. After the programme most people tarried for a bit of refreshment and then hurried out to the Washington, where Mr. and Mrs. Zeggio of the Italian Commission, were receiving.

All members of the Morning Choral Club were invited yesterdey and most of them appeared. Some of the many gueste were.

ly, the St. Louis Woman's Club never gave a more respiendent function.

Mrs. Francis received as befitted the president, and looked her best and youngest in a charming pink-lavender messaline, 1820, of course, and shirred on heavy cords, busque and skirt. Her hat was a large flat drooping at the sides, of the same pinkish tint in a fine chip, with its only trimming a wreath of large, bright pink roses, each covered carefully with its own little veil of lavender tulle. The effect was singularly soft and opulescent. opalescent. Mrs. David R. Francis, Jr., joined her mother-in-law guite late, wearing a unique and very handsome costume, made entirely from white Canton crepe shawls, heavily and gorgeously embroidered. The long, deep fringes were combined to form an overskirt effect over white chiffen, while more fringe added a bolero touch to the bodice. Her hat was a pink straw with rink roses.

Mrs. Norris Gregg, as chairman of the Entertainment Committee, also received in the anterooms, wearing a silk mull in Persian pattern, very old-fashloned and grandmotherly, with wide insertion of white silk lace and a white lace hat.

When everybody had assembled at 3 o'clock—and, for once, everybody was quite on time—the ballroom was filled to overflowing, and many seats placed in the antercoms. The programme was of an hour's duration and was well arranged. Mme. Albertini, who was in excellent volce, sang, first, two numbers, with 'cello and violin obligato, by Messrs, Anton and Tholl. Then came a 'cello Romance, played by Anton, and a song cycle of Landon Ronald's, with Mrs. William K. Stanard as the vocalist. Mrs. Stanard hus a thoroughly well-trained and delightful volce, and her friends yesterday were much gratified to have an opportunity to hear her sing outside her own drawing-room.

by the news of the assassination of Mme.
Standmann, the wife of General Standmann, well known in the salons of St.
Petersburg.

The assassination took place in broad daylight in her apartment on the Quai de la Cour, where General and Mme.
Standmann lived. What adds to the horror of the tragedy is the suspicion that the crime was noe a common murder, but the vengeance of a relative.
